"Oregon's Best Source of Good Roses"

This catalog marks the thirtieth year of producing roses by the firm of Peterson & Dering. Our nursery was formerly located east of Portland in what is known as the "Nursery Center". After ten years in that locality, our nursery was moved to Scappoose, Oregon, in 1932. Scappoose is 25 miles north and west of Portland. Our fields are located on the Scappoose Drainage District lands. The soil is heavy and hard to work, but it does produce a rose that is heavier for weight, durable for shipping and gives our customers real satisfaction.

For years we have dusted our roses during the growing season regularly once a week. A large amount of topping is done to get as many breaks from the base of our plants as possible. Ordinarily in our particular vicinity we get frost in early October and after sufficient frost, digging of our roses is started in November. We try to have everything dug and graded before Christmas time. Each plant is placed in our modern cold storage cellars from which they are shipped during the months of December, January, February and March.

As has been recognized by leading growers during the past 15 years, rose hybridizing is essential to rose growers. We have joined in this thinking with others, and started our hybridizing rose program in 1949. We have many thousands of seedlings in the field and a satisfactory percentage of them are looking very promising. In another few years, when we have worked up the stock of these new roses, we will be offering them to you, our good customers. A rigid program of testing will be followed. You can look forward to P & D's new rose varieties being a real addition to your rose list.

These Tree Roses are grown by a method that takes three years to grow. Multiflora La Grifferi is budded on Multiflora Japonica. The La Grifferi makes a hardy, strong and large calicered stem. At 36 inches four buds of the desired variety are placed on these stems — most growers bud only two. When starting Tree Roses in pots it is a very good idea after they are potted to lay them flat, covering them with wet straw or other material until they have good root action and the tops have started slightly then place them in an upright position.
